Abstract: This article is about the types of phrasal verbs according to transitivity on the short story “A cosmopolite in a cafe” by O’ Henry.

Key Words: syntactical and semantic peculiarities, verbal element, transitive verbs and intransitive verbs.

In this article we are going to discuss transitive and intransitive phrasal verbs on the short story “A COSMOPOLITE IN A CAFE”. Before scrutinizing the main theme, we are giving some points of view of some linguists’ related to the topic.

Phrasal verbs are verbs that comprise a verb, a preposition and an adverb. As Smith states those kind of verbs have their specific syntactical and semantical peculiarities in the usage. If they are analyzed syntactically, the position of constitute elements are used differently or consistently. According to Smith, the syntactic peculiarities indicate that the constitute elements that are used to form the phrasal verbs are made up of verbal element and prepositions used as adverbs.[1]

Fraser deals with the verbal elements of the phrasal verbs from a syntactic point of view.[2] He claims that the second element of the phrasal verb which is the particle can be connected with both the transitive and intransitive verbs. He gives attention to these kinds of verbs and how they can be influenced when they are connected with the particles. The transitive lexical verbs changes into intransitive verbs when they are phrasalized or on the contrary. For example: -After I explained the math problem, she began to catch on (= understand) -She began to catch on the math problem. In the first sentence, ‘catch on’ cannot take an object, i.e., it is intransitive, whereas in the second sentence ‘catch on’ is transitive verb since it takes an indirect object (math problem).

When we discuss Transitivity and Intransitivity of English Phrasal Verbs they are divided into 6 types in Comprehensive Grammar of English Language.[3]

| Table 1 |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| Lexical Verb | Direct Object | Particles | Prepositional Object |
| 1. Type 1 Phrasal Verb | come | - | in | - | - |
| 2. Type II. Phrasal Verb | send | someone | away | - | - |
| 3. Type I. Prepositional Verb | come | - | with | + me |
| 4. Type II. Prepositional Verb) | receive | something | from | + me |
| 5. Type I. Phrasal-Prepositional Verb) | run | - | away | with | + it |
| 6. Type II. Phrasal Prepositional Verb | send | someone | out | into | + the world |
| | put | someone | up | for | + election |

In comparison with above mentioned types of phrasal verbs, Lindsay Clandfield in her article divided phrasal verbs according to transivity into five types. [4] These are:

1. Intransitive (with no object):
   Why are standing? - Sit down, please.
2. Transitive verbs whose object can come in two positions - after the verb or after the particle:
   I think I'll put my jacket (Object) on (particle) OR I think I'll put on (particle) my jacket (object)
   If the object is a pronoun, however, it must come between the verb and the particle:
   I think I put it (pronoun) on (NOT I think I put on it).
3. Transitive verbs whose object must come between the verb and the particle/preposition:
   Its high-quality designs sets (verb) the company (preposition) apart from its rivals.
4. Transitive verbs whose object must come after the particle:
   The baby bikes after (preposition) his mother. (Object)
   Why do you put up with the way he treats you?
5. Verbs with two objects - one after the verb, the other after the particle:
   They put (verb) their success down (preposition) to (preposition) good planning
   Investigating the phrasal verbs in the short story “A COSMOPOLITE IN A CAFE”,
   I cipher them (that is (1*5)according to Lindsay Clandfield’s division which was mentioned above.
